Dear Madam:

In a recent magazine article I read of your ability to decipher code, cipher, and similar material. I wonder if you would care to undertake solving a problem for us? The Ethnologist connected with the University of Texas has been unable to decipher it.

We have a document probably written one-hundred-fifty years ago. It was written by a German using Spanish, musical symbols, pictures and possibly Greek and German. A part of the work is in Indian and Spanish picture writing. It is probably a problem for a very competent ethnologist.

Would you care to undertake this and if so how much would you charge?

Yours truly,

L. G. Fry

Dear Mr. Fry:

Your letter of December 1st is acknowledged.

It is impossible for me to make any statement as to the probability of ultimate decipherment of the manuscript you describe without seeing the manuscript itself or photostatic reproductions of representative portions of it. May I request therefore that you send photostats of at least 10 pages of the manuscript. These should be chosen from different sections of the original document if possible. It is possible that the photostats might be sufficient to enable me to render a preliminary opinion as to whether or not the document is decipherable.

It would be even better if I could see the entire manuscript. Its age leads me to believe that it is considered to be of some value by those in whose possession it is in at the present time. It is not clear in your letter whether you refer to a manuscript in the possession of your family or in the possession of the University of Texas. It would be desirable if the owner of the manuscript would be willing to forward it to me by registered mail, return receipt requested, the latter to be your evidence that I hold it, and in addition, you may have my promise to send you a memorandum receipt immediately upon the arrival of the manuscript, signifying that it is held in my possession as a temporary loan.

Decipherment of ancient writings is not necessarily an ethnological problem, nor even a philological one. The mystery of cuneiform writing was solved by a British army officer who had had no training in the fields of philology and ethnology.

In reply to your query as to what I would charge for a solution of this manuscript, if that were possible, I will state that in a case of such probable historical interest as this, I would prefer not to make a financial charge, but to have scholastic recognition for the accomplishment, if and when achieved. If a department of the University is working upon this project, I should be very happy to give any service possible in return for recognition as a collaborator.

May I request when you write me again that you give me any collateral information concerning the manuscript which you have, such as where and when the manuscript was discovered, under what circumstances, who the writer is thought to have been, and his occupation; also any additional facts or beliefs or traditions which may possibly concern the document.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mrs. Helmick:

Your article in this month's "Readers Digest" entitled "Key Woman of the T-Men" has interested me greatly. Several statements therein have suggested to me a code system which I believe to be undecipherable. This system I believe to be thoroughly practical for both written and telegraphic messages.

The following is a sample message coded in this system:

Dear Madam:

Having read in the Christian Science Monitor of what your specialty consists in, I venture to bother you with a problem, that you may or may not enjoy giving a few minutes to; if it has no interest for you I shall try not to be disappointed if I get no reply to this.

I have a needlework sampler, part of a collection of 200 pieces, an example of the type I call the illiterate sampler. It is a genealogical record and bears the following lines:

Sasidu by eouer
and to misfourtin born
by man for saken
and left my compeins scorn
when fois oppress me
freends I siek in vein
wat then is left
I myself and God remains

It is in cross-stitch and every stitch is perfect, so there is no room for doubt as to each letter, except that elsewhere the loop of the b and the d are varyingly before or after the upright, and is so in the word "freends", and therefor might be in the first word; that is, it might be meant for a b.

I sent this problem to the English periodical, Notes and Queries, some years ago, and got but one reply which suggested: "Seduced by lover" for the first line, the only part in doubt. I submitted that to Professor John Manly, and he said that it was easy to see how that could be the intention for the last word if copied from the written word, a shortened l and a v looking like a u.

With an apology for trespassing upon the time of a busy woman, and thanking you in anticipation for any attention you may bestow on this,

*Yours faithfully
James W. Walker*

Dear Sir:

Your letter of March 10th with your query concerning a genealogical sampler is acknowledged. Having been absent from Washington for several weeks, I have not been able to give your problem any attention until recently.

Your query does not come strictly within the field of cryptanalysis. However, I have summoned ~~such~~ analytical faculties such as I may possess for a problem such as yours with the result that I feel that the suggested interpretation "seduced by lover" is perhaps a reasonable and logical reading. You did not give any date for your sampler but if it is of the 16th or 17th centuries the spelling would be capable of fairly wide interpretation. At that time of course, the letters I and J and U and V were used interchangeably by the literate and illiterate alike.

With regret that I am unable to give more exact help,
I am,

Very truly yours,

E. S. FRIEDMAN.

Dear Mrs. Friedman,

Referring to my letters of March 12 & 27, I am sorry to inform you that your answer never arrived.

As you know, I am keeping the tigerskin for your good-self and am very anxious to dispatch it to your address. Will you please let me know your solution of the different codemessages ???

I wish ^{to}sustain my offer referring to the tigerskin as long as possible, but depend partly on my wife, who is taking care of it. All kind of skins must be kept with naftalin in order to avoid damages by moths and my wife makes me pay the expenses. Besides in this climate skins must be exposed to the sun every week and really my better half asks me always, what's about the solution of the codemessages, which I should have received long ago from Washington. You will understand perfectly that my position is really difficult and the only thing I could do for you is the agreement with Mrs. Ottilie Andresen : that she has to keep the tigerskin till Christmas without more expenses for me than the correct costprice of the naftalin. If until that date there is no answer from your goodself, I am bound to give this tigerskin as a Christmaspresent to her.

Will you please do your best to send me your answer before Christmas ?

If your answer arrives after Christmas and if I have to send a tigerskin, as promised after solution, I must ^{ask} you kindly to wait some time till I can get another tiger of good size and fine skin. These animals are not the same, what they used to be before and prefer to keep away from guns instead of accepting the oldfashioned brave fighting.

Awaiting your kind reply and your solution for my codemessages, I remain, Dear Madam,

very truly yours

Dear Mr. Andresen:

Your letter of September 7 is acknowledged.

It is really with a deep feeling of apology that I reply in this belated fashion to not only your latest letter but those of March 12 and 27, 1938. The tiger skin should, I think, go immediately to Mrs. Andresen, since I see no time either in the near or distant future which I may devote to the solution of your messages. Of course I realize that I am vulnerable to your possible charge that I have, during the intervening time, attempted to solve your messages and failed; if you prefer that interpretation to my truthful statement that it is hopeless for me to find time to devote to pastime (a category in which attempts to solve your messages must fall), there is nothing I can do to prevent it.

Your original challenge arose, if I recall correctly, because of your reaction to a statement which you had read, purported to have been made by me, that there is no such thing as an indecipherable cipher. I wish to state emphatically that I have never made such a statement, either verbally or in print. It is one of those fictions about which the press is incorrigible, and years of effort on my part to silence the abovementioned quotation remain unsuccessful. A statement entirely contrary to the abovementioned one, which I frequently make, is that a twelve year old boy might evolve a cipher message which would prove indecipherable to the greatest experts in the world. There are many types of methods which remain indecipherable so long as only two or three examples of the method are available for study. That latter statement may, and perhaps does, apply to your particular system. However, that proves nothing concerning the practicability or security of such systems for use by government agencies or large organizations. Methods suitable for the latter must be such that even though every detail of the operation and method is known "to the enemy", the messages (even in a very large number) will remain indecipherable.

Another requirement of cipher systems suitable for use in extensive operation is that the method must be extremely speedy. Hand operated methods, and particularly those using only pencil and paper, are seldom, if ever, found to possess this requirement. Only systems capable of a speed of enciphering and deciphering 100 to 150 letters per minute are deemed worthy of examination and study as having potential suitability for government use.

I should like to add with all sincerity that I have enjoyed your correspondence; a feeling, I may state, which I do not recall having received from any other correspondence with the hundreds of persons who write me on the same subject. I regret that I have been unable to devote some time and attention to your messages.

With my best wishes to Mrs. Andresen and the hope that she will enjoy absolute possession of the tiger skin, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

ELIZEBETH SMITH FRIEDMAN.

Madame:

Having learned of your cryptanalytic abilities through one of the popular magazines, I am writing you in the hope that through your skill and ability you may help my mother and I. Perhaps I am overstepping my ground or maybe asking something you are advised against doing. At any rate, there is a little mystery concerned with the murder of my father, which occurred three weeks ago, and especially about his money. Now, it so happens that, due to unjustified judgements against him which he vowed never to pay,
he secreted his money in such a way that the holder of these notes could not force payment. Of course, the property was changed to my mother's name, but his cash was taken care of in some other way. The day he was killed we believed he withdrew from somewhere over four-hundred dollars. He told both myself and my mother that he had this money someplace in Ohio, probably close to Fort Wayne since that is my home, my presence in Bloomington due to my being a student in Indiana University. He was found with his bill-fold gone. However, later the bill fold was found and in it was an insignificant looking note which seemed very important. Here is a copy of it:

$18,360.00 1/12/38
 460.00 2/11/38
 17,900.00

I, G, 36 B 5 2 4 E

Key in Bible

You'll find it easy.

Take 30 minutes.

The day he was killed

My first thought was to our large family Bible, which we keep as an ornament in the living room; but careful perusion of each page profited nothing. Evidently there is a key to this code of letters and figures someway in the Bible. The "I" can mean "one" or "first" or Isaiah. The next letter could pass for either a "C" or a "G". It resembled mostly a "G" - Genesis, Galatians. - The "2" might have been meant for a "Z", although I do not think so.

Now "E" can stand for Ezra, Esther, Ecclesiasticus, Ephesians, and Ezekiel. Is this just a "sticker" or is there some way out through some set code for Bibles? I find myself against a stone wall when I try to decipher it.

We think that perhaps a solution to this puzzle might in turn solve the puzzle of the murder.

I have told you the whole story as well as I can, I believe; and I do hope that you might be able to give some sort of a lead. I also wish you to understand that any possible assistance you might lend will be well rewarded. I hope you don't think me too foolish for writing, and I do hope you might write me a card telling me just what you make out of it. In behalf of my mother and myself I say I thank you a hundred-fold!

Gratefully yours

Dear Mr. Thompson:

Your letter of February 24th is acknowledged. Although the problem you present is not strictly in the nature of cipher solution, this office would be glad to help you if we can. It would be advisable to have a photostatic copy of the piece of paper found in the billfold. If a photostat is made however, care should be taken that no part of the original, not even the surface or the ink thereon, be disturbed during the preparation of the photostat. It is also requested that additional information be supplied:

1. Is the handwriting on the paper fragment your father's handwriting?
2. Does all handwriting on the fragment appear to have been placed there at the same time? Or does part of it appear to have been written at an earlier date than the other parts?
3. Was the paper worn, or does it show in other ways of having been carried about for some time?
4. Are there any signs of any kind, such as pin pricks or dots anywhere upon the fragment of paper?
5. In connection with the apparent message upon the fragment of paper, do you believe that word "key" could actually refer to a key to a strong box or safety deposit box which might have been hidden per se in the pages of the family Bible?
6. Did your father have any favorite Bible passages? If so, what are they?
7. Are there any marks upon any pages of your family Bible such as symbols or characters of any kind as pin pricks, dots, through or near any letters, designations such as might be construed as directions of a map which would reveal a hiding place?
8. Have you any inkling of the meaning of the letters which appear diagonally, "take 30 minutes"?
9. Are there any additional circumstances or facts surrounding the murder of your father which might be helpful in an interpretation; say for example, where was the billfold found?

It is suggested that the Bible referred to must be the Bible in the possession of your family or your household. There is no "set code for Bibles" as you suggest in one of your questions. Additional possibilities of interpretation for the symbols which appear are: I C 3 6 may mean First Corinthians, Chapter 3, Verse 6; B S 2 may mean 2nd Book of Samuel; or, 2 4 E may mean Ecclesiastics, Chapter 2, Verse 4.

The above are suggested as places to be examined with particular care, in addition to the places which you related in your letter as having already been examined.

I think it is only fair to warn you that in our experience with cases such as this where such fragmentary symbols only are in existence, it is not often possible to solve the mystery. However, with renewed assurance that we shall be glad to help you if it is at all possible, I remain,

Very truly yours,

ELIZABETH SMITH FRIEDMAN.
